We're inviting three kinds of educators, those who bring depth, presence, and genuine love for their craft into the classroom.

1. Primary Educators

Educators who notice children with depth, bring calm curiosity into the room, and make learning feel meaningful and alive.

We're seeking teachers who understand that childhood is not just preparation for something else, it matters now. Those who create classrooms where children feel seen, where wonder is welcomed, and where learning happens through exploration, not just instruction.

We're looking for educators who believe in inquiry-led, child-centered learning. Who can cultivate strong classroom culture and maintain high standards with warmth. Those who understand that student voice and choice aren't add-ons, but essential to how children learn and grow.

If you approach teaching with patience, attentiveness, and the belief that every child has something important to say and if Project-Based Learning feels like a natural way to make learning real, this could be your community.

2. English Educators (Middle School)

Those who live with literature. People who read often, collect books, exchange recommendations, and enjoy conversations about stories, ideas, and language. Educators who bring the joy of reading and the power of expression into children's everyday lives.

We're looking for teachers who see language not just as a subject, but as a way of thinking and connecting. Those who make space for questions, interpretations, and the quiet magic that happens when a child discovers a story that speaks to them.

You'll build strong literacy, comprehension, and writing skills, developing language for academic excellence as well as real-world expression, discussion, and critical thinking. If you believe that reading shapes how we see the world, and that good writing teaches us to think clearly and feel deeply, we'd love to hear from you.

3. Social Science Educators (Middle School)

Those who see history, geography, and civics not as lists to memorise, but as conversations that matter. Educators who bring contemporary issues into the room and help students see themselves as part of the larger world.

We're looking for teachers who can make the past feel present, who help students ask better questions about power, place, and people. Those who create space for inquiry, discussion, and the kind of critical thinking that turns information into understanding.

We're hiring:

- Primary Educators (PRT)
- English Educators (Middle School)
- Social Science Educators (Middle School)
